"Bless Me Father" is a comedy depicting the happenings in a small Irish parish. The priest comes down sick, there is a rumor that the Pope, John Paul II is coming for a visit and the janitor gets locked in the confessional and is forced to listen to the confessions of the parish. The janitor's wit and wisdom helps to set things right, but not before the audience gets a good laugh at the goings-on inside this small town. "I must 'confess', it was a gloriously funny time..." The Post Gazette

MONEY MATTERS

If you liked "Sex Please We're Sixty", you'll love "Money Matters", with the return of .Bud "the stud" Davis. The late Mr. Hammond spent twenty years printing $20 bills on a printing press he built in the basement. Mr. Hammond's widow promised to leave the manor, all her assets to George and Annie (his faithful retainer and his daughter), instead she has left the manor to a stranger, Bud "the stud" Davis, who is emphatic about turning it into a retirement home for ladies. Determined to keep the manor, Annie has an old friend play the role of a ghost, to help convince Bud that the manor is haunted.
